2. Phr. exercise and addition, the critical explanation of a passage of Scripture, which a divinity student has to prepare before he is licensed or ordained as a minister; also such an explanation at a meeting of the Presbytery; see

Sc. The critical explication of a passage of Scripture, at a meeting of Presbytery, by one teaching presbyter, succeeded by a specification of the doctrines contained in it by another; both exhibitions to be judged of, and censured if necessary, by the rest of the brethren. The second speaker is said to add (Jam.); Obsol. 'Exercise and additions' is the name given to a prescribed exegesis, with expository remarks and paraphrase, of a portion of the original texts of Holy Scripture, which a divinity student has to prepare as one of his 'trials' for licence to preach, and as one of his college discourses. In old times the presbyterial 'exercise' was an essay or paper by a member of Presbytery on some theological topic (A.W.), The Presbyterial Exercise and Addition the Exercise gives the coherence of the text and context, the logical division, and division of the words. The Addition gives the doctrinal propositions or truths, STEWART Coll (1700) 30 (JAM).

FARREN, sb Sur w.Cy. [fa rən.] 1. A division of land; certain rights of pasturage; see below.

Sur. Farren is used here [at Farnham] for an acre of ground in the Broadmead, which is a large piece of land of above 100 acres let out to various people, they taking as many acres as they like, cutting the hay for their own use. These 'Farrens' are let at so much and one horse or two cows or six sheep can be turned out much, and one horse or two cows or six sheep can be turned out to each acre or farren. Horses, cows, and sheep all go together (H.B.); From the bill of the annual Chertsey Mead sale (now posted at Halliford) it may be seen that 'farrens' are measures of land (for some purposes freehold and for some common pasture) on Chertsey Mead as well as on Cowey, N. & Q. Nhb. The far side from near the point to the 'little heen,' or heel. s. Wor. A 'feather' or 'feathering' is a sort of knife about 6 or 8 ins. long, much shorter than the coulter, and it cuts from below, whereas the coulter cuts from above. This 'feather' can not be used in the modern iron plough. In the old wooden ploughs the 'feather' was welded on by a smith, on the land side not far from the point (H.K.). [Which curvature is also carried forward on the back of the feather of the share (of a plough), Stephens Farm Bk. (ed. 1849) I. 151]
Hence Feather, v. to put a kind of knife on a wooden plough; see below.

s. Wor. If the ground ploughed is very stiff or very foul, the soil or 'pelf' will 'reeve' or gather round the coulter and at length reach the beam and stop the work of it, as it has continually to be cleaned off To prevent this, the ploughshare is sometimes 'feathered' (H.K.).

tries the endurance of a cock or 'kemp.' Cf. cock-fighters.

Nhb¹ Each combatant is provided with an equal number of stalks and heads ('kemps'), and holds out one to be struck by the opponent. If it is decapitated by the blow the player gives his return stroke with a fresh 'kemp', but-if it survives the blow it is used in return. The play is thus kept up alternately until one of the players has lost all his heads. The victor then counts his survivors. n Yks. (I W.) 7. A supply of water from locks and weirs on the Thames to assist the barges; also used attrib.

s.Cy. Grose (1790); Used on the upper Thames between Lechlade and Oxford. In going down the river, as it is called locally, the boats have to shoot a number of weirs, as in places there are no locks but simply a number of floodgates stretching across the river in grooves made in the bottom of the river, so that they hold back the water until it is up to flash-mark. On the appearance of a boat or boats coming down the person in charge of the weir lets go the weir-tackle and this swings to one side, and the boat or boats go through with a rush, and if one of then has the misfortune to 'run to hill,' the flash is lost, and the boat or boats have to wait for another flash, which in summer-time may mean two or three days; but if all goes well, and the boat clears the weir, it travels on with the first flash from weir to weir as long as the flash will last (S.S B.); Two flashes and no more may be penned for or drawn in a week, and those only on such days and at such hours and in such manner as the Conservators appoint, Thames Conservancy Bye-Laws (1898). Oxf. People speak of 'flash day' and 'flash morning' (G.O.).

boils, a quantity of sour butter-milk is poured into the pan, and the mixture is gently stirred In a few minutes the curd rises to the surface, and is carefully skimmed off with a fleeting dish into a sieve to drain. Lan. Gaskell Lectures Dial. (1854) 19; Lan., ne Lan. Chs. As soon as the whey is exhausted of its cream about two quarts of butter-milk are poured into it, which again breaks into what are called fleetings, Marshall Review (1818) II. 57; Chs. In the old fashioned method of cheese-making it was always customary to boil the whey. The first fleetings rose just before the whey came to the boil. These were the richest, and were skimmed off and kept by themselves. They were called 'cream-fleetings,' and were churned into butter. As the whey began to boil harder, a somewhat coarser and less creamy kind of fleetings rose to the surface These also were skimmed off, and fleetings rose to the surface. These also were skimmed off, and were used for the farm men's supper. A small quantity of buttermilk was then added to the boiling whey, which caused a very coarse curdy kind of fleetings to rise, and these were kept for feeding calves. . . FLINCHES, sb. pl. Dur. Yks. Also in form flinchings

e Dur.¹ A number of boys placing their caps in a row against the wall. The players in turn take a ball, and standing at a distance try to call the ball into a cap. The owner of the cap which contains try to roll the ball into a cap. The owner of the cap which contains the ball picks it out and throws it at one of the players. If he fails the ball picks it out and throws it at one of the players. The rais to hit a boy, a small stone is put into his cap, and he is said to be 'one egg.' As soon as he is 'three eggs,' he takes up his cap, and this goes on until there is just one player left. The rest of the players must now place their hands against the wall in turn, and the winner is rewarded by having three shots with the ball at each player's hand. If a boy flinches or takes his hand away, he suffers three shots more for each flinch. When a player takes the ball out of his cap, to throw at a boy, he may call on him not to suffers three shots more for each flinch. When a player takes the ball out of his cap, to throw at a boy, he may call on him not to 'stir flesh'; but if the other boy is quicker, and calls out 'flinches,' he is allowed to dodge. The game is sometimes played in another way, as follows: The players take the names of the days of the week. 'Sunday' will then throw the ball against the wall, and call out another name, e. g. 'Friday' If 'Friday' succeeds in catching the ball or 'keeping' it before it touches the ground, he throws it against the wall and calls out (say) 'Wednesday!' If 'Wednesday' falls to 'kee' it he picks up the ball and throws it throws it against the wall and calls out (say)' Wednesday!' If 'Wednesday' fails to 'kep' it, he picks up the ball and throws it at a player, shouting out 'nee [no] flinches,' whereupon the player stands fast. If 'Wednesday' hits the player, the player tries to hit some one else, and so on until there is a miss. The one who misses throws the ball out and ceases playing, and thus the game goes on till only one player remains: then follow the rewards and punishments. n.Yks. (I.W.)

w.Yks. Every New Year's Day morning, troops of children are seen running to and fro in the streets from shop to shop, where their salutation is 'Please, pray nah New Year's gift?' At the drapers' shops they are each served with a row of pins, with which they afterwards play at several pin games. Another game is called 'flush' or 'save all.' In order to play this game a small octagonal wooden roller, four or five inches long, is required. Its eight sides are marked, two sides each, with I (ones), II (twos), X (crosses) called 'flush,' and V called 'save all.' Any number can play at this game. Each player having deposited say two pins, then commences to throw the roller in his turn, and if it stands at I the player takes in one pin if of II. stands at I the player takes up one pin; if at II, two pins must be there being neither losses nor gains; but if it stands at X, 'flush,' then the thrower wins the lot, N & Q.
